ABOUT THE SPEAKER

Nadine Maher is a NYS certified General/Special Education teacher and Board-Certified Behavior Analyst (BCBA) with extensive experience working with young children and their families. She received her Master of Education degree in Early Childhood Education with a specialization in teaching children with autism and Intellectual Disabilities from Teachers College, Columbia University and became a Board-Certified Behavior Analyst through Pennsylvania State University.

As a Parent/Behavior Coach and Consultant in her private practice, Nadine works with families facing challenging behaviors in their home and community by offering support and coaching to family members on behavior management strategies. Nadine also provides consultation to various school settings where she supports teachers in the design and implementation of effective strategies to prevent behavioral challenges and address developmental concerns.
